Office Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 18 1963
JOHN F. DAVIS, CLERK

NO. 479

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1963

EDWARD EARLE BECK, Petitioner

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Respondent.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
To The United States Court of Appeals
For the Fifth Circuit

WILLIAM F. WALSH
1955 Richmond Avenue
Houston, Texas 77006
Counsel for Petitioner

Alpha Law Brief Co., 402 M & M Bldg., Houston 2

INDEX

	Page
Opinion Below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Questions Presented	2
Constitutional and Statutory Provisions Involved	3
Statement of the Case:
I. The Arrest	5
II. The Trial	6
III. The Post-Trial Denouement	8
Reasons for Granting the Writ	13
Conclusion	19
Certificate of Service	19
Appendix "A" (Opinion of the Court of Appeals)	20
Appendix "B" (Judgment of the Court of Appeals)	33
Appendix "C" (Order denying rehearing)	34
Appendix "D" (Letter announcing denial of reconsideration of Order denying rehearing)	35
Appendix "E" (Letter exchanged by lawyers representing the principal prosecution witness)	36

AUTHORITIES

Cases

	Page
CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS
Fifth Amendment	2, 3
Sixth Amendment	2, 4
STATUTES
21 USC 176(a)	1, 6
26 USC 4744(a) (2)	6
26 USC 7237(d)	6
28 USC 2106	4, 18
JUDICIAL OPINIONS
Alcorta v. Texas, 355 U.S. 28	14
Alford v. United States, 282 U.S. 687	14
Ashley v. Texas, 319 F.2d 80	16
Avery v. Georgia, 345 U.S. 559	14
Berger v. United States, 295 U.S. 78	17
Farkas v. United States, 2 F. 2d 644	14
Gordon v. United States, 344 U.S. 414	14, 16
Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657	17
Lynumn v. Illinois, ____ U.S. ____, 9 L. Ed. 922, 83 S.Ct. 917	15
Meeks v. United States, 163 F.2d 598	16
Mesarosh v. United States, 352 U.S. 1	3, 18
Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 368 U.S. 464	17
Stevens v. People, 245 Ill. 593, 74 N.E. 786	14
United States v. Dye, 221 F.2d 763	13
United States v. Shotwell Mfg. Co., 355 U.S. 233	3, 13, 18

NO. _____

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1963

EDWARD EARLE BECK, Petitioner

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Respondent

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI To The United States Court of Appeals For the Fifth Circuit

---

Edward Earle Beck prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirming his conviction for smuggling in violation of 21 U.S.C. 176(a).

OPINION BELOW

The District Court for the Southern District of Texas did not render an opinion. The opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported at 317 F. 2d 865 and is reproduced as Appendix "A" to this petition.

JURISDICTION

The opinion (R. 535; Appendix "A") and judgment (R. 549; Appendix "B") of the Court of Appeals are dated May 30, 1963. A petition for rehearing (R. 550) and motion for leave to file supplemental record (R. 560) were denied by per curiam order (R. 603; Appendix "C") on July 22, 1963. A motion for reconsideration of these decisions was denied July 30, 1963 (Appendix "D"), on which date Mr. Justice Black enlarged the time for filing this Petition to and including September 20, 1963. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether petitioner enjoyed the Fifth Amendment's due process of law or the jury trial contemplated by the Sixth Amendment (including the right to have the credibility of the principal prosecution witness evaluated by the jury, rather than the judge or prosecutor) when:

a. A key prosecution witness has herself pleaded guilty to the very offense for which petitioner is being prosecuted as a principal and her credibility as a witness may depend on the jury's belief that she herself is actually guilty;

b. The witness testifies that she does not intend to withdraw her plea of guilty;

c. The judge instructs the jury that he meticulously satisfied himself of her guilt before accepting her plea;

d. But the judge has already held at least one personal conference with the witness which leads to his approval of the withdrawal of her plea of guilty and to ultimate dismissal of all charges against her, after petitioner's conviction on the basis of her testimony?

2. Whether the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, or the federal government's general obligation to conduct fair criminal trials, imposes an affirmative duty on the judge, the prosecutor, the probation officers, or other public officials to reveal to the defendant the true and complete status of clemency negotiations with a witness who has pleaded guilty and remains unsentenced while testifying, or at least an obligation not to remain silent when such information becomes material in impeaching the witness?

3. Whether a United States District Judge has a duty to reveal information within his personal knowledge to the defense in a criminal case, when his prior participation in the case makes him a witness to facts having a material bearing on the credibility of the principal prosecution witness, and when these facts do not appear of record?

4. Whether the Court of Appeals erred, under the unusual circumstances which came to light in this case only after the record on appeal was designated by the parties, in refusing to order either a reversal of petitioner's conviction or a fact-finding hearing to prevent a judgment based on "tainted testimony" or a "corrupt record" within the meaning of this Court's opinions in Mesarosh v. United States, 352 U.S. 1, and United States v. Shotwell Mfg. Co., 355 U.S. 233?

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND STATUTES INVOLVED

The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in pertinent part:

> "No person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; . . ."

The Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in pertinent part:

> "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury. . . ."

Section 2106, Title 28, United States Code, provides:

> "The Supreme Court or any other court of appellate jurisdiction may affirm, modify, vacate, set aside or reverse any judgment, decree, or order of a court lawfully brought before it for review, and may remand the cause and direct the entry of such appropriate judgment, decree or order, or require such further proceedings to be had as may be just under the circumstances."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

As we explain below; the facts which are material to the questions presented became known only after the record on appeal to the Fifth Circuit was designated. Although these facts were presented to the Court of Appeals, that Court refused to allow its clerk to incorporate some of the evidence in the record which he certified to this Court (R. 603, Appendices "C" and "D"). The clerk has furnished us with a supplemental certificate, which we have filed with the record, incorporating this additional material. In this petition, page references to the certified record are preceded by the letter "R" and page references to the supplemental certificate are preceded by the letter "C".

I.

The Arrest

Petitioner, a hairdresser (R. 57, 119, 434), went to Mexico with a woman named Janet Watkins for a weekend in August, 1961, to see the bullfights (R. 97), driving with a couple named Jan and Frank Taylor (R. 103). On their return to the United States, customs inspectors made a "thorough search" (R. 139, 237) of Janet Watkins and found five marijuana cigarettes "done up on top of her head in a roll off of her neck", with 15 seconal capsules and 41 benzedrine tablets (R. 64, 140-145, 239-240).

The petitioner denied "ownership or connection" with the marijuana cigarettes and told a customs inspector that "he didn't know nothing about it" (R. 77). He said that "he didn't know where they came from or how they got there" (R. 154) and "denied any knowledge of the marijuana" when he was first questioned by Customs Inspector King (R. 300). Janet Watkins told King that she herself had purchased the marijuana and other drugs and that only she had anything to do with it (R. 187-188, 463).

On the other hand, Beck told Janet Watkins that he would "take care of it" (R. 74), that he "had taken the blame" (R. 156), and later did indeed tell Inspector King that he "placed the marijuana in her hair without her knowledge" (R. 300-301). Before the U.S. Commissioner, Beck "took all the blame" (R. 160, 303). He had been discussing marriage with Janet Watkins at the time this offense was committed (R. 160, 201, 458).

II.

The Trial

Beck and the Watkins woman were jointly indicted (R. 508-509) for smuggling the marijuana, in violation of 21 U.S.C. 176(a), and for transporting it without paying the federal transfer tax, in violation of 26 U.S.C. 4744(a)(2). Janet Watkins pleaded guilty to the tax count only; pursuant to a bargain with her lawyers the prosecutor dismissed the smuggling count against her, and her sentencing was deferred (R. 586, 592, 599-600). By statute, a defendant convicted of the smuggling count must be sentenced to the penitentiary for a mandatory five-year minimum term, without possibility of suspended sentence, probation or parole (26 U.S.C. 7237(d)), benefits available to Janet Watkins if convicted only of the tax count.

Beck pleaded not guilty to both counts of the indictment (R. 11). His first trial, in December of 1961, at which Janet Watkins testified for the government (C. 125-180), ended in a mistrial (R. 32, 587-588) because of a hung jury (C. 370). Janet Watkins also testified (R. 94-231, 442-464) for the government at the second trial, in February of 1962 (R. 17). This time, Beck was convicted (R. 503, 519) and sentenced to six years confinement on the smuggling count (R. 507, 524), the judge having entered judgment of acquittal on the tax count (R. 468, 524).

Beck's culpability and the credibility of Janet Watkins were bitterly disputed.[1] Summarizing the evidence for the

[1] Janet Watkins testified that she had never been to Nuevo Laredo before (R. 104); Frank Taylor said that she told him she had lived there and knew several people there (R. 365); and that jury, the trial judge pointed out that "someone" acquired the marijuana, that the contraband was found in Janet Watkins' hair, and then stated: "From that point on, I think almost everything in the evidence is disputed by one witness or the other." (R. 481-482).

Testifying about her own plea of guilty, Janet Watkins gave these answers to these questions (R. 180-181):

"Q. . . . that plea is still in effect, isn't it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The plea of guilty? You have never, either directly personally or through an attorney, undertaken to withdraw or change that plea, have you?
A. No, sir.
Q. And you don't intend to now, do you?
A. No, sir.

The trial judge emphasized Janet Watkins' acknowledgment of her own guilt by including the following statement in his charge to the jury (R. 484), describing her plea of guilty:

---

she directed them to the store where the pills were purchased (R. 369). Watkins said she saw the others smoking marijuana (R. 112-116); Taylor denied this (R. 384). Watkins swore the petitioner arranged her hair with the Taylors present (R. 119-121); Taylor denied this and testified that petitioner had no opportunity to do so (R. 385-386). Watkins said she had never seen marijuana before (R. 114), that she had never even smoked a cigarette (R. 117-118), and that she could not put up her own hair (R. 185, 203); a prostitute who worked with Janet Watkins as a call girl (R. 331-332) had seen Watkins smoke a marijuana cigarette (R. 338) and had seen Watkins put up her own hair (R. 336-337), as had Taylor (R. 364) and the petitioner's mother, with whom Janet Watkins once lived (R. 434). Watkins told the customs inspectors she was a "cosmetician when employed" just after her arrest (R. 463).

"The evidence further shows that at that time, I asked her if she had put the marijuana in her hair, and she said she had not, and I then asker her, having some uncertainty as to the propriety of the plea of guilty, if she denied having put it there. I asked her if she knew it was there, and she stated to me that she did, whereupon I accepted her plea of guilty."

III.

The Post-Trial Denouement

Designation of the record on appeal was completed by the parties on April 23, 1962 (R. 3, 5, 564) and the appeal was argued on October 11, 1962 (R. 534). On May 13, 1963—just seventeen days before the Court of Appeals returned its opinion affirming petitioner's conviction—petitioner's counsel learned for the first time (R. 562) that all charges against Janet Watkins were dismissed after Beck's conviction.

On the very day the record was designated for the appeal—but just after designation of the record (R. 564)—Janet Watkins filed a motion to withdraw her plea of guilty on the footing that it was "entered improvidently, and without understanding . . . of the nature of the charge, the effect of the plea, or her rights in the premises . . ." (R. 565). The motion was signed (R. 565) by one of the two lawyers who represented (R. 179-180) the Watkins woman when she entered her plea of guilty and to whom, she claimed at this trial (R. 192-193), she told "the truth." The motion was endorsed "Unopposed" by the Assistant U. S. Attorney who prosecuted this petitioner (R. 566) and was granted (R. 565-566) by the same District Judge who assured the jury that Janet Watkins admitted to him in open court that she knew the marijuana was in her hair (R. 484).

The case against Janet Watkins was dismissed on June 28, 1962 (R. 567-568), on motion of the government.

But the Court of Appeals—like the trial jury—did not know of these developments, because the record and docket sheet presented to it (R. 4-5) necessarily terminated with the final designation of the record on appeal. The record compelled the Court of Appeals to find that, "The evidence as to the knowledge of Janet Watkins was not proved by one or two isolated questions seeking to impeach her, but there was much evidence." (R. 545; 317 F. 2d at 871).

Dismissal of the charges against the government's witness was brought to the attention of the Court of Appeals by Petition for Rehearing (R. 550-559) and Motion for Leave to File Supplemental Record (R. 560-568). The government then filed ex parte statements (only one of which is under oath), establishing the following:

(1) Even prior to the date on which she committed herself by pleading guilty (September 25, 1961; R. 586, 600), neither of Janet Watkins' lawyers thought that a judge or jury would consider her to be a credible witness if she denied knowing that the marijuana was in her hair. One lawyer certified that "either a jury or a judge . . . probably would not believe her story" and that "in my view, it was doubtful that a jury would believe her statement that she did not know the cigarettes had been placed in her hair." (R. 585). The other lawyer said: "I thought it very unlikely that a jury would believe her in this respect." (R. 599)

2. The lawyers representing Janet Watkins told her that "she would probably escape prison time by entering a plea to the tax count" (R. 585-586) and that "if she pled (sic) guilty to the tax count, she had an opportunity to obtain a lesser sentence, with suspension or probation in whole or in part. . ." (R. 599)

3. The government entered into and abided by a bargain to dismiss the charge involving mandatory jail time in exchange for a plea of guilty. The Assistant U. S. Attorney admitted that, "I had agreed that the government would dismiss count one of the indictment if she entered a plea to the tax count." (R. 592) Both lawyers representing Janet Watkins specifically and independently verified this bargain before permitting her to enter a plea of guilty (R. 586, 599-600).

4. After she pleaded guilty to "knowingly and willfully" smuggling the marijuana (R. 193), but even before this petitioner was tried the first time (R. 587), Janet Watkins asserted her own innocence to the probation officers, the very assertion which her lawyers said would not be believed in court (R. 585, 599). The facts she recounted to the probation officers "indicated her to be innocent of the offense" and "the probation officers had in turn taken Janet Watkins to Judge Connally who had also talked to her. From my talks with the probation officers," one of her lawyers said (R. 587) in a statement solicited and filed by the prosecution, "I concluded that both they and the judge had a doubt as to her guilt."

5. "Janet Watkins testified for the government at the first trial, and in her testimony she stated that she had not known that the marijuana was in her hair. (R. 593)." In spite of her testimony and her conferences with the probation officers and the trial judge, "During the 60 day period between the first and second Beck trials nothing occurred with regard to Janet Watkins' case" (R. 593) except that both of her lawyers also discussed her case with the district judge (R. 587-588, 601).

6. When the Assistant United States Attorney sought permission from the Department of Justice to dismiss the case against Janet Watkins, he represented that petitioner secreted the marijuana in her hair "unknown to Watkins" (R. 582) and assured the Department that "she has maintained this story throughout . . ." (R. 583) Addressing the Court of Appeals, which had access to the records of trial, this same prosecutor said (R. 572):

> "Janet Watkins' story of this whole transaction varied from time to time between her arrest and her testimony. Some of the variations in her testimony could have made the difference between her innocence and her guilt."

Likewise, the application for authority to dismiss the indictment represented to the Department of Justice that Janet Watkins "is naive" (sic) (R. 583), but the government's brief in the Fifth Circuit contended (R. 553, 576) that, "These are not the activities of a naive, inexperienced young lady!"

The government's last ex parte statements were filed at the clerk's office in New Orleans on July 17, 1963 (R. 596), a Wednesday. On the following Saturday, July 20, petitioner's counsel mailed (C. 35), a reply brief (C. 22-35) containing controverting information (C. 26) to the clerk, who did not receive it until Tuesday, July 23 (C. 22), the day after the Court of Appeals denied a rehearing (R. 603). The controverting information was a letter from one of Janet Watkins' lawyers to the other which is reproduced as Appendix "F" to this petition. This letter, written on November 29, 1961, before Beck's first trial, establishes:

1. Janet Watkins met with a probation officer after pleading guilty.

2. The probation officer believed that she was a "victim of circumstances."

3. The probation officer "was able to have a conference with Judge Connally concerning the matter, who in turn had a conference with Janet personally."

4. The prosecutor and probably the judge were "also convinced that Janet is a victim of circumstances and not guilty."

5. "The present course of action is as follows: Janet will be a witness for the government against Mr. Beck. After she testifies against him, Janet will withdraw her plea of guilty to not guilty, and the case will be tried before the court if tried at all. Although the Government has not promised anything, they have as much as indicated her cases will be dismissed."

Upon learning that the Court of Appeals had denied the petition for rehearing while petitioner's answer to the government's pleading was in the mail, petitioner filed a motion for reconsideration of the petition for rehearing (C. 3-21), which was denied by a letter from the clerk notifying counsel that the Court refused to allow the letter described above "to become a part of the record on appeal." (Appendix "D" to this petition; C. 2) Even though the government's last pleadings had been filed only a few days earlier, the Fifth Circuit Rules do not protect a party against the possibility that a petition for rehearing will be denied while he is obtaining evidence to contradict his adversary's pleadings (C. 1, par. "D").

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

Like United States v. Shotwell Mfg. Co., 355 U.S. 233, "This case presents an unusual question involving the integrity of a criminal trial in the federal courts" which is not fully reflected by the record in the courts below.

A writ of certiorari should issue for the following reasons:

1. Standards of propriety for federal officials dealing with unsentenced defendants who are expected to testify against others as prosecution witnesses have not yet been—but should be—established by this court. The facts admitted in the certificates filed by the government in this case demonstrate that this decisional vacuum results in practices which effectively prevent juries from reaching informed evaluations of the credibility of such witnesses, thus curtailing the Sixth Amendment right to have such determinations made by a jury—"the only tribunal entitled to pass upon it. . ." United States v. Dye, 3 Cir., 221 F. 2d 763, 767.

2. The fact that the trial judge specifically instructed the jury that he satisfied himself that the witness was guilty when he accepted her plea (R. 484), without mentioning that she (R. 587) and her lawyers (R. 587-588, 601) had already personally conferred with him to advance their theory that she is actually innocent, is such a departure from fundamental standards of fairness as to call for the exercise of this court's supervisory powers over inferior federal tribunals. When Watkins' sworn claim that she had never undertaken to withdraw her plea and did not intend to do so (R. 180-181) is coupled with the fact that she was allowed to withdraw her plea (R. 565-566) as soon as the record on appeal was designated (R. 564), it is apparent that this jury was given the kind of "false impression" which amounts to a denial of due process of law. Alcorta v. Texas, 355 U.S. 28, 31.

"The mind of justice, not merely its eyes, would have to be blind to attribute such an occurrence to mere fortuity," as Mr. Justice Frankfurter said in Avery v. Georgia, 345 U.S. 559, 564.

Vast experience in jury trials is not needed to appreciate the significance of the practices employed in this case. The "hope or expectation" in "the mind of the witness" that "he would be favored in the case pending against himself" is a vital factor to a juror who must decide whether the witness is telling the truth. Stevens v. People, 215 Ill. 593, 74 N.E. 786, 789. This court has reversed at least two criminal convictions because cross-examination about such prospects was curtailed by the trial judge. Alford v. United States, 282 U.S. 687, 693; Gordon v. United States, 344 U.S. 414, 422-424. The question in these cases is not whether the judge or prosecutor made promises to the witness, but whether there is "anything else that would throw light upon the prosecuting witnesses' state of mind . . . even if it be fully conceded that he had not the slightest basis from any act or word of the district attorney for such a belief or hope." Farkas v. United States, 6 Cir., 2 F. 2d 644, 647.

To present a witness to a jury as an admitted accomplice who has pleaded guilty, when the witness and her lawyers are actually pursuing a course of action calculated to convince the authorities that she is innocent, is to deprive the jury of crucial information. When "almost everything in the evidence is disputed by one witness or the other", as the judge told this jury (R. 481-482), any evidence bearing on credibility assumes enormous importance, particularly when there is also testimony that the witness wants to secure her freedom because "she didn't want to lose her children." (R. 342) See Lynumn v. Illinois, ____ U.S. ____, 9 L. ed. 2d 922, 83 S. Ct. 917, in which this court recognized the inherently coercive effect of such a possibility, a consideration which a jury might certainly be expected to appreciate.

In this case, two lawyers representing the witness had concluded that no jury would believe her if she claimed to be innocent (R. 585, 599) and had communicated this "advice" to the district judge before the trial which is now under review (R. 587-588). But a jury must believe Janet Watkins in order to convict Beck, because it was the Watkins woman who testified that Beck arranged her hair in Mexico. (R. 119-121).

The Beck jury had an absolute right to conclude that Beck's admissions were nothing more than an attempt to "take the blame" (R. 156, 160) for a woman he wanted to marry (R. 160, 201, 458). The jury was entitled to apply the maxim "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus" and to discard as unworthy of belief everything Janet Watkins said if she insisted on her own innocence—precisely the result which her lawyers predicted if she submitted her own case to a jury. Instead, however, she was allowed to tell a "credible" story:

(a) a story in which she shared the guilt;

(b) a story which portrayed her as ready to accept appropriate punishment for her own misconduct;

(c) a story which was shattered irrevocably, within instants after the record to be seen by the appellate courts was designated by the parties, when the trial judge permitted her to withdraw her guilty plea and the government dismissed the case against her.

By whatever means this strange result came about, these facts should be presented to a jury at a new trial so that a jury, rather than the judge or prosecutors, may decide whether this woman is telling the truth.

Although, "It is difficult to imagine a more direct and intimate relationship likely to affect one's testimony than that between the plaintiff government and its most important witness. . ." (Meeks v. United States, 9 Cir., 163 F. 2d 598, 599), one such relationship is that of the judge with "a prisoner whose plea of guilty put him in large measure in the hands of the speaker." Gordon v. United States, supra, 344 U.S. 414, 422. At least in Gordon a transcript existed with which the witness could be impeached.

Passive non-disclosure of evidence favorable to a defendant "amounts to such fundamental unfairness in the trial of a criminal case as to amount to a denial of due process" (Ashley v. Texas, 5 Cir., 319 F. 2d 80, 85) when such evidence is known to the prosecution. It would certainly appear that judges who hold these ex parte meetings with prosecution witnesses should be under an even greater affirmative duty to disclose material facts within their knowledge in order to discharge their own obligation to "a sovereignty whose obligation to govern impartially is as compelling as its obligation to govern at all; and whose interest, therefore, in a criminal prosecution is not that it shall win a case, but that justice shall be done." Berger v. United States, 295 U.S. 78, 88. As this court knows, "only the defense is adequately equipped to determine the effective use (of such information) for purpose of discrediting the Government's witness and thereby furthering the accused's defense. . ." Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657, 668-669.

Certainly this conviction should not be permitted to become final on this record, as it exists today. The sequence of events alone suggests that material evidence was not disclosed to the jury in this very close case—so close that the first jury was unable to agree upon a verdict (C. 370). Just as "(t)rial by affidavit is no substitute for trial by jury" (Powell v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 368 U.S. 464, 473), the ex parte exculpatory statements solicited and filed by the government are no substitute for a hearing at which petitioner may enjoy a right

---

[2] In one context or another, such conferences are increasingly creating problems in the administration of criminal justice. See United States v. LaVallee, 2 Cir., 319 F. 2d 308, presenting the typical situation in which only one defendant is involved and he is the person claiming to be aggrieved. New considerations arise when there are multiple defendants and the interests of those who will plead not guilty may be directly affected as in this case, by favored treatment of those who will testify for the government. Minimal standards of fairness would seem to require that these meetings be held in open court (where they may be reported) or that other defendants be advised of the substance of these conversations for use in impeachment.

to cross-examine and to call witnesses of his own, as ordered by this court in United States v. Shotwell Mfg. Co., 355 U.S. 233, and as requested by the government in Mesarosh v. United States, 352 U.S. 1.

However the participants may now describe events which took place two years ago, one of Janet Watkins' lawyers was certain enough of her position to tell her other lawyer in an unequivocal, contemporaneous letter written before this petitioner was tried, that the prosecutor "is also convinced that Janet is a victim of circumstances and not guilty" and that "Janet will be a witness for the Government against Mr. Beck. After she testifies against him, Janet will withdraw her plea of guilty to not guilty. . ." (C. 12, 26; Appendix "E" to this petition.)

That letter alone should establish probable cause for further judicial inquiry before the petitioner is sent to the penitentiary on the basis of this record. This court (like the Court of Appeals) has statutory authority (28 USC 2106) to "require such further proceedings, to be had as may be just under the circumstances." We believe that the facts already admitted in the government's certificates, in and of themselves, not only require a new trial but demonstrate a very real need for a definitive opinion from the Supreme Court discussing and establishing standards of conduct which will reveal, rather than conceal, the true nature of considerations present in the minds of prosecution witnesses who themselves are subject to prosecution.

However, if this court does not wish to decide these questions without the benefit of an opinion from the Court of Appeals, we submit that it would be appropriate and certainly necessary in the interests of justice to this petitioner to grant a writ of certiorari, to reverse the per curiam opinion (R. 603; Appendix "C") denying a rehearing, and to remand the case to the Court of Appeals with instructions to order an evidentiary hearing before a different district judge and to reconsider the case on the basis of the facts established at that hearing, subject to further discretionary review by this court.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, a writ of certiorari should issue to review the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this case.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM F. WALSH
1955 Richmond Avenue
Houston, Texas 77006
Counsel for Petitioner

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that copies of the above and foregoing petition were mailed to the Solicitor General, Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C., air mail postage prepaid, and to William A. Jackson, Assistant United States Attorney, United States Court House, Houston, Texas, first-class postage prepaid, this 17th day of September, 1963.

William F. Walsh, Esq.

APPENDIX "A"

IN THE

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 19,562

EDWARD EARLE BECK, Appellant

versus

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas

(May 30, 1963)

Before HUTCHESON, WISDOM and GEWIN, Circuit Judges.

GEWIN, Circuit Judge: Edward Earle Beck, appellant, was convicted by a jury of a violation of 21 U.S.C.A. 176 (a). The substance of the offense was the smuggling of five marihuana cigarettes into the United States from Mexico at the Laredo International Bridge. The marihuana was hidden in the elaborate hairdo of his travelling companion, Janet Watkins.

Beck and Janet Watkins, together with another couple, went to Mexico for a weekend. When the parties entered the United States upon their return, an initial inspection revealed no contraband; but Janet Watkins was taken into a search room by a female inspector and subjected to a thorough search. The inspectress found five marihuana cigarettes "done up on top of her head in a roll off her neck", with a quantity of seconal and benzedrine tablets.

Beck was tried along for the offense; Janet Watkins having previously plead guilty to "knowingly" smuggling the cigarettes into the United States. At the trial of this case, Janet Watkins, a chief witness for the prosecution, testified in answer to some questions that she did not know the marihuana was in her hair; but in answer to other questions she admitted having knowledge of its presence. When the search was made, Beck told the customs officer that Janet Watkins had no knowledge of the marihuana in her hair and that he had placed it there without her knowledge. At his trial, he claimed that Janet Watkins and placed the marihuana in her hair and that he had no knowledge of the existence of the narcotic.

In summary, Beck specifies the following four errors which he claims are sufficient to reverse his conviction: (1) That his character was attacked improperly upon the direct examination of Janet Watkins, when in response to the prosecutor's question, she testified that Beck was a pimp, panderer, or procurer, in view of the fact that the defense did not attempt to establish Beck's good character nor did he take the witness stand; (2) The trial court erred in submitting the case to the jury on the theory that Beck and Janet Watkins were acting in concert with each other; whereas, Janet Watkins herself denied that she knew anything about the presence of marihuana in her hair, and therefore she and the defendant could not have acted in concert with respect thereto; (3) Since the evidence will only support a conviction of Beck upon the theory that he caused Janet Watkins to violate the law, the trial judge erred in refusing to instruct the jury that he must have wilfully caused such violation as provided by Title 18 U.S.C.A. § 2(b);[1] (4) It was error for the court to refuse to allow the defense to prove that cosmeticians receive 500 hours of training in hairdressing, in view of the peculiar and unique significance of hair styling in this case.

During the Government's direct examination of Janet Watkins,[2] an effort was made to prove that the defendant Beck had undertaken to persuade her to become a prostitute; it being contended that such a course of conduct would ". . . show the similarity of this type of action . . .", that is, similarity in using her to smuggle marihuana, and using her in the business of prostitution. The inquiry related to whether or not Beck and the witness Watkins had a discussion ". . . as to a means of raising . . . money?". At this point in the trial the court sustained the defendant's objection. On cross-examination the defense made rather strong insinuations concerning the character, veracity and conduct of the witness Watkins, making full inquiry as to her background, her employment, where she worked, her association with others, and similar matters.[3] The defense also undertook to impeach the witness Watkins on numerous grounds, interrogating her as to her knowledge of and use of marihuana, whether she had been to Mexico on prior occasions, her association with the defendant Beck, whether she knew of the location of a certain store in Mexico,

[1] Title 18 U.S.C.A. § 2(b) provides:
"Whoever causes an act to be done, which if directly performed by him would be an offense against the United States, is also a principal and punishable as such."

[2] The witness Watkins had also been known as Mrs. Adriano.

[3] The following is from the record:

her ability to arrange her hair as it was arranged when the marihuana was discovered, and whether she realized that she had plead guilty to "knowingly and wilfully" having possession of marihuana." The cross-examination by the defense as to the activities of the witness Watkins rather

---

"Q. All right. Then you had been there at that time whatever length of time you had lived at Cherie's on LaBranch, is that correct?"
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What was Cherie's other name
"A. Cherie — I don't — her last name I don't know.
"Q. Did you ever know it?
"A. I think it was Cherie Parker. She was from Corpus Christi.
"Q. Did you know her in Corpus?
"A. Yes. I met her through a girlfriend of mine.
"Q. Just state if you knew her. Mrs. Adriano, while you were living at Cherie's, did you have any employment?
"A. No, sir. I was looking for a job.
"Q. Will you tell the jury how many hundreds of dollars you sent back to Corpus —
"A. None.
"Q — in July the month of July 1961?"
"A. None.
"Q. Not any?
"A. No, sir."

The trial judge commented as follows:

"I think it is admissible at this stage of the proceedings. I am aware of the fact that I excluded it when this witness testified first. My reason for doing so was, I thought the point which you are now making at that posture, was probably well taken. Since the witness has left the stand, however, the defense has injected this question of her good character, of her working as a prostitute, of the fact that the witness Collins had a discussion or an inspection of this witness while she was staying at the address which is shown to be the same as the Taylors' house, she has been impeached in any number of particulars, and in my judgment, in rebuttal, she is entitled to show that her only connection with this type of work was through the defendant and through the Taylors, and also to show her relationship with the defendant, in explanation of her own testimony. In other words, having been impeached, she is entitled to show the whole story.

clearly related to the matter of her being a prostitute.' On redirect examination the Government asked the witness if she had ever engaged in prostitution. The court permit-

---

"I will instruct the jury that the defendant is not on trial for any offense except those in the indictment, and they will not consider this other than in so far as it has to do with the credibility of this witness."

"Q. I direct your attention to a date along about the 25th or 26th at the end of August, 1967, to a telephone call from one Dottie Youngblood. Did you receive a call from that madame to fill a date at a given address in an area of Houston known as Sin City?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you or not take a taxicab to that place, and find there two men — to any place there and find there two men waiting for two girls?

"MR. JACKSON: Just a minute, Your Honor, we object to this line of questioning. Mr. Foreman can come out and ask the question, of course, for impeachment as to any conviction she might have for a felony, but to go all around the thing and attempt to, by innuendo and so forth, the question has no materiality and it is certainly not a proper question for impeachment purposes.

"MR. FOREMAN: I am not attempting to impeach her. I am attempting to lay a predicate for impeachment.

"THE COURT: I am prepared to rule on it without further argument.

I think you may prove, if you can, that this young lady has used marijuana, because she has denied it, but in the event you prove she has used it, I think it would furnish some motive for the offense. I don't think you may attempt, in the guise of showing she may have smoked marihuana, to leave these inferences you are undertaking to leave, and I would sustain an objection to that part of the question.

"MR. FOREMAN: I don't think I am undertaking to leave any inferences, but I think I owe it to the Court, in laying a predicate for impeachment, to fix the time, place, and the occasion.

"THE COURT: All right, sir.

"Q. Do you know a prostitute in Houston whose real name is Dorothy Crim, but whose professional name is Vicki Collins?

"A. I know her from here.

"Q. Did you see her at an apartment off San Felipe around the 1500 block, in an area sometimes called Sin City, on a night in late August?

"A. No sir.

"Q. Around the 25th, 6th or 7th?

"A. The 26th of August I was on my way to Corpus Christi.

"Q. And when did you come back from Corpus Christi?

"A. The following week.

"Q. All right. Before you went to Corpus Christi, and late in August, did you see Vicki Collins at an apartment in the southwest area of Houston?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Off San Felipe? Did you on that occasion fix not only her hair, but your own hair?

"Now you may go forward."

ted her to answer, but refused to permit the Government to ask her whether she had ever been requested by any person to engage in prostitution."

As one of its witnesses, the defense called Dorothy Crim, who testified to a number of facts which directly conflicted with the testimony of Janet Watkins. Dorothy Crim claimed that she had seen Janet Watkins arrange her own hair in the style in which it was arranged when the marihuana was found and that she had seen her smoke a marihuana cigarette. The examination of Miss Crim went much farther. In substance she testified that she once worked with Janet Watkins as a prostitute. She further outlined the fact that ". . . the Madame that I worked for had sent me over to see what she looked like, and to talk to her, and see if she could use her on calls." She stated that the LaRivera Club where Janet Watkins had worked was a place where prostitutes made their dates; that she and Miss Watkins went to an apartment off San Felipe Drive in Houston known as "Sin City" to meet two "customers"; and that the Madame received forty percent of the call girl's earnings. The defense, in its brief, asserts that it is important

---

"A. No, sir.
"Q. After or just before leaving the apartment?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Did you or not, on that occasion, receive thirty dollars from Vicki Collins?
"A. No, sir.

"THE COURT: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I want to give you this instruction. A few moments ago, I permitted this witness to testify over objection that she was not a prostitute and never worked as such, and had not associated with prostitutes,' words essentially to that effect.

"The question was then put to her whether anyone had asked her or suggested that she work in that capacity. I think the question is improper; there is no need to pursue that question any further. You ladies and gentlemen please will not consider the question as meaning anything. Disregard it, if you please."

to appreciate the fact that the defense never endeavored to impeach Miss Watkins by proving she was a prostitute. It is difficult to see how such an assertion can be made or that the testimony offered by the defense could have any other effect. The trial judge gained a different impression of the evidence, and we strongly suspect the jury gained the same impression as the trial court.

After all of the foregoing transpired, the Government was permitted to recall Janet Watkins, and after prolonged argument and discussion, the court permitted the following questions:

> "Q. Have you ever been requested to go into that business [prostitution] by any person?
> "A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. And who was that person?
> "A. Eddie Beck."

Beck strenuously contends that this evidence was inadmissible; being wholly unconnected with the crime charged and that it could have no other effect upon the jury than to prejudice them against him.

The case of Bracey v. United States, D. C. Cir., 1944, 142 F. 2d 85, is somewhat similar to the case at bar. In that case the defendant was charged with carnally knowing and abusing a twelve year old girl. The defendant's step-daughter was a witness against him. The defense attempted to impeach her testimony by proving that the little girl did not like her step-father. On recross-examination, the girl was allowed to explain that the reason she disliked the defendant was the fact that he had committed a similar crime against her. The Court said in conjunction with the admissibility of this evidence.

> "When, however, the impeachment of a witness is conducted in such manner as itself to confuse the jury concerning the existence of bias, or of its character if bias does exist, and thus to mislead the jury concerning the veracity and dependability of the witness, then the trial judge may properly permit an explanation to be made."

The rule applies logically not only when a witness is impeached because of bias, but also when bad character is used to impeach a witness. As stated in United States v. Boyer, D. C. Cir., 1945, 150 F. 2d 595, the Court said:

> "Whether the witness is or is not a defendant, if the opposing party introduces his previous convictions we think the witness should be allowed to make such reasonably brief protestations on his own behalf as he may feel able to make with a due regard to the penalties of perjury."

When the defense opened up the question of Janet Watkins' character by attempting to prove that she was a prostitute, the prosecution was properly allowed to counteract that evidence or rehabilitate the witness, even if in doing so the evidence offered made the defendant appear as an unsavory character. As held in United States v. Novick, 2 Cir., 1941, 124 F. 2d 107:

> "And if the evidence was proper rebuttal, the fact that incidentally it implied an illegal act on appellant's part would not bar it."

The extent to which counteracting and rehabilitative evidence may be received after the credibility of a witness has been attacked is a matter in which a trial judge has broad discretion. We hold that the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in this case. There was no unfair advantage to the prosecution and no unfair surprise to the defense. Bank of America National Trust & Sav. Ass'n. v. Rocco, 3 Cir., 1957, 241 F. 2d 455.

In addition, the trial court gave a thorough cautionary charge to the jury to the effect that the evidence offered was not received to cast any reflection on the character of Beck, but only incidental to the credibility of Janet Watkins. This charge was approved in Abrens v. United States, 5 Cir., 1959, 265 F. 2d 514. We do not approve an unbridled attack upon the defendant's character in a situation in which a witness has been impeached. In the circumstances of this case, since the witness had been attacked by a showing that she was a prostitute, rebuttal testimony was entirely proper to show that her only connection with that type of activity was through Beck, and to show her relationship with Beck in explanation of her testimony.

In his second specification of error the appellant contends that the trial court erred in submitting the case to the jury on the theory that the defendant could be convicted if the jury believed he aided, abetted, counseled, commanded, induced or procured the commission of the offense by Janet Watkins as provided by Title 18 U.S.C.A. § 2(a).* Grant v. United States, 9 Cir. 1961, 291 F. 2d 746. It is contended that knowledge on the part of Janet Watkins of the presence of the marihuana in her hair is necessary proof to support such a theory. It is claimed that the only such evidence was developed by the appellant on cross-examination when she admitted that she entered a plea of guilty to "knowingly and wilfully" smuggling the contraband. Such

---

*Title 18 U.S.C.A. § 2(a) is as follows:

"Whoever commits an offense against the United States, or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is a princip[illegible] evidence, it is contended, was only for impeachment and could not be otherwise used, and certainly it could not be used to prove that Beck aided or abetted Janet Watkins. The defendant relies on Grant v. United States, 9 Cir., 1961, 291 F. 2d 746. We cannot agree with this contention. There was ample evidence in the record to show a close relationship between Janet Watkins and the defendant. She stated that he influenced her to move to Houston from Corpus Christi; that he arranged for her to live with his mother; he obtained a room for her at the Taylor residence; he discussed marriage with her; she shared the same motel room with him on the trip to Mexico; she plead guilty to "wilfully and knowingly" transporting marihuana arising out of the same transaction, and such plea was entered in the same court; and he proved that she was a prostitute, according to the evidence of witness Crim. In addition, there was evidence that Beck was in possession of marihuana before returning to the United States; that he smoked it; that Janet Watkins admitted having the marihuana in her hair and the witness Crim testified that she was thoroughly capable of arranging her hair in the fashion in which it was arranged when the marihuana was found. Beck takes a rather strange position. In the trial court he sought an acquittal by carefully and cautiously proving full knowledge of the presence of the marihuana on the part of Janet Watkins, but here he contends that since she had no knowledge of its presence, Beck could not be guilty of aiding and abetting her in the commission of the offense. The evidence as to the knowledge of Janet Watkins was not proved by one or two isolated questions seeking to impeach her, but there was much evidence. We find nothing in the case of New York Life Ins. v. Bacalis, 5 Cir., 1938, 94 F. 2d 200, a civil case, to support the appellant's argument. In that case hearsay evidence was admitted for the sole purpose of impeachment and was not admitted as substantive evidence. The court clearly charged the jury as to this aspect of the case:

> "In the event you should find that Beck knew of Miss Watkins' intention to bring the marihuana back, but if he did not in any sense participate in her smuggling of the marihuana, if he did not aid, abet, counsel, command or induce her to do so; if it was her act, and he had knowledge but did not aid, abet, command or induce her to do it, and simply sat by and said nothing, then Beck should be acquitted, because the mere fact that he knew the law was being violated would not make him guilty."

Beck next contends that when the trial judge charged the jury on the theory that he was guilty under 18 U.S.C.A. 2(b), that is, that he caused Janet Watkins to transport the marihuana into this country, that he did not include the word "wilfully" in his charge, which is an ingredient of the offense. This contention arises from the court's following charge:

> "Whoever causes an act to be done which, if directly performed by him, would be an offense aginst the United States, is also a principal punishable as such . . . if he caused that act of smuggling to be done, he would likewise be guilty with Miss Watkins. . . ."

At the beginning of the charge, the trial court read the indictment which charged Beck with "knowingly and wilfully" smuggling marihuana into the United States. He then read to them 21 U.S.C.A. 176(a), which requires a "knowing" intent on the part of an accused. Immediately thereafter the court charged further.

> "The defendant is charged with performing this act knowingly. Knowingly, of course, simply means that it was done with knowledge, that it was done deliberately, as to be distinguished from an act which was done accidentally or inadvertently."

The charge throughout contained references to the necessity of a finding of intent for a conviction. The charge must be looked upon as a whole in order to determine if an issue is fairly presented to the jury. Legatos v. United States, 9 Cir., 1955, 222 F. 2d 678; Windisch v. United States, 5 Cir., 1961, 295 F. 2d 531. We hold that the charge as a whole fairly presents the issue of wilfullness to the jury and is not subject to the infirmities claimed.

In a further effort to prove knowledge on the part of Janet Watkins, it was the defense's contention throughout the trial that Janet Watkins had put the marihuana in her hair as she rolled it up; but she denied that she could or did do so. The testimony showed that when Janet Watkins crossed the border, she listed her occupation as "cosmetician when employed". The defense sought to prove that a cosmetician is required to have at least 500 hours training in hairdressing to become licensed. The trial judge excluded this proffered evidence as irrelevant, and Beck claims this was error. There was never any contention in the trial that Janet Watkins was a licensed cosmetician, as opposed to a non-licensed one. There was ample evidence in the case from which the jury could have drawn the conclusion that she could roll up her own hair. There was direct testimony to that effect. At best, the receipt of the offered evidence was discretionary with the trial judge, it was cummulative, and its exclusion was not prejudicial error.

The defense of the appellant was skillfully conducted in the trial court by experienced counsel. Our examination of the record convinces us that he received a fair and impartial trial. Cases of this nature do not always run smooth and it is often true that witnesses on both sides make conflicting statements. Such was true in the trial of this case. We are impressed with the following forthright statements from the appellant's brief:

> "We are not, of course, suggesting that this Court should weigh the evidence; we are not appealing this conviction on the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction as a matter of law."
>
> * * * *
>
> "We concede, in the light of this relationship between the parties, that the Appellant has made many contradictory statements concerning the marihuana found in Janet Watkins' hair, some of which would authorize conviction and some of which would indicate that he is innocent." (emphasis added).

The appellant does not claim serious errors in the trial, but we cannot agree.

The judgment of conviction is AFFIRMED.

A true copy
Test: EDWARD W. WADSWORTH
Clerk, U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit
By: ?? ?? ? ?
New Orleans, Louisiana, July 31, 1963

APPENDIX "B"

IN THE

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

October Term 1962

No. 19,562

D. C. Docket No. 18138 Crim. Laredo Division

EDWARD EARLE BECK, Appellant

versus

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas

---

Before HUTCHESON, WISDOM and GEWIN, Circuit Judges.

JUDGMENT

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, and was argued by counsel;

ON CONSIDERATION WHEREOF, It is now here ordered and adjudged by the Court that the judgment of conviction of the said District Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

May 30, 1963

Issued as Mandate:

APPENDIX "C"

IN THE

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 19,562

EDWARD EARLE BECK, Appellant

versus

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas

---

On Motion for Leave to File Supplemental Petition and On Petition for Rehearing

---

(July 22, 1963)

Before HUTCHESON, WISDOM and GEWIN, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Upon consideration of the petition for rehearing and of the motion for leave to file supplemental record in support thereof, and of the answer of the United States with exhibits to the motion for leave to file and to the petition for rehearing, and it appearing that the motion for leave to file supplemental record is without substance, it is ORDERED: that the motion for leave to file supplemental record be, and it is hereby, DENIED; and that the petition for rehearing also be, and it is hereby DENIED.

APPENDIX "D"

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FIFTH CIRCUIT

Edward W. Wadsworth
Clerk

Post Office Box 30120
New Orleans 30, La.

Office of the Clerk
July 30, 1963

Mr. William F. Walsh
Attorney at Law
1955 Richmond Avenue
Houston 6, Texas

Re: No. 19562 - Edward Earle Beck vs. United States of America

Dear Mr. Walsh:

In connection with your motion for reconsideration, and alternatively for stay of mandate, I am directed to advise that the Court will not permit the filing of your motion for reconsideration, as in the nature of a second petition for rehearing, nor will it entertain the second petition or permit it to become a part of the record on appeal. However, I enclose our usual form of order granting your alternative motion for a 30-day stay from July 22, 1963, in order to enable you to petition the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari. I am also enclosing three extra copies of this letter, for your use, if needed, in attaching same as an appendix to your petition for writ of certiorari, since no formal order was entered by the Court on your motion for reconsideration.

Very truly yours,
EDWARD W. WADSWORTH,
E. W. Wadsworth.
Clerk

encs.
cc and enc.:
Mr. William A. Jackson
Mr. Morton L. Susman

APPENDIX "E"

November 29, 1961

Mr. Stanley Freed
Attorney at Law
P. O. Box 298
Laredo, Texas

RE: U. S. v. Janet Watkins
Criminal No. 18138
U. S. District Court, Southern District of Texas

Dear Stan:

Since Janet pled guilty she has had a conference with Hugh Johnson, Probation Officer, who believes that she was a victim of circumstances the same as you and I beleive. After conferring with the Probation Officer he was able to have a conference with Judge Connally concerning the matter, who, in turn, had a conference with Janet personally. It is my understanding, although not confirmed, that Judge Connally is of the same opinion as we are. After conferring with Judge Connally we were able to talk to Bill Jackson of the Federal District Attorney's office, who is also convinced that Janet is a victim of circumstances and not guilty.

The present course of action is as follows: Janet will be a witness for the Government against Mr. Beck. After she testifies against him, Janet will withdraw her plea of guilty to not guilty, and the cases will be tried before the court if tried at all. Although the Government has not promised anything, they have as much as indicated her cases will be dismissed. Janet is in the process of paying us money which will be sent to you as soon as she is able to raise the $50.00. At the present time I intend to come to Laredo. We likely will not have to appear until around December 6.

Sincerely yours,
DIXIE & SCHULMAN

By:
Jack J. Rawitscher

JJR:evs